The Fire Department.

We do not forget the fact that these firemen sacrificed their lives in the attempt to save the lives and property of others, when we say that the Department never more clearly manifested its efficiency, its want of discipline and general excellence, than in the disastrous conflagration of Sunday morning. The difficulties under which they had to struggle from the want of a head to direct and combine their efforts, and which rendered all but individual action impossible, were such as to defy the best organization and discipline. Under the circumstances, what the whole assault of companies at fought and patriotic as they are,—could do in the saving of many available area well as to make up an intelligent judgment, that one steam fire engine, manned by a paid force, or three companies with hand engines well drilled and efficient working order, would have accomplished more than the whole force of our Department. This is an unpalatable truth to pay for, who are to foot the bills, which no one can deny that should be known to the citizens of Chicago in order. We account for the inefficiency by the unusual subtlety of the conflagration and everything in which the fire-fiend delighted. Simultaneously with the work of the engines, the drinking commenced, and long before the fires for cool and energetic work had burned out, many of them in firemen's dress were too far gone to know whether they were really at a fire or a wedding. Of course, there was confusion, fighting, everything and ill-directed effort; because where there is drink there is no head. We say this in sorrow, not in anger. There are hundreds of the Department, who are not amenable to the censure, but we believe upon their revelry occasioned, and who regret as much as we do the truth of what we state. They will be glad to see an inquiry instituted into the particulars that we have hinted, and who take the charge of plunder in many images, to the end that the respective companies may be freed from the complicity of those who at all times will be liable to fall from their discipline.

Book Sale Election.

DENVER, Oct. 17.—At the election held for Territorial officers to-day, the Democratic ticket is elected by a majority of 1,200. In the Council Assembly the Democrats gain thirteen.—The Pioneer.

This dispatch sends to the Associated Press agency. It contains either four deliberate falsehoods or more number of honorable statements as to conduct in Republican majorities of both. There is no such Democratic gain in any county as one twelfth put heard from. Of twelve counties heard from, eight show a decided gain. Mr. The Legislature has only two members, with the help of their holding over, to secure the Senate. The Democratic majority in the lower House of the General Assembly will be elected on. 8th.
